

The School of Geography and Development and Center for Climate Adaptation Science and Solutions invite you to join a Brown Bag Lunch Talk:

“Bringing equity into climate change adaptation planning: the case of New York”

Dr. Robin Leichenko

Professor and Geography Department Chair, Rutgers University and co-Director of the Rutgers Climate Institute

Robin will also speak about her new book, Climate and Society: Transforming the Future (2019, co-authored with Karen O’Brien), which shows that climate change is both a critical challenge for society but also an opening for transformation to a more sustainable and thriving world. Her 2008 book Environmental Change and Globalization: Double Exposures (co-authored with Karen O’Brien), won the Meridian Book Award from the American Association of Geographers.

Friday, February 22, 12:00-1:30 PM
ENR2 Building, Room N604

Please bring your lunch and join us. Coffee and cookies will be provided.
